

Dear FCC,

It is my opinoin that the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections.

Indiana's Telephone Privacy law dramatically improved our private time at home. We used to get around a dozen phone calls per week, and we could never sit down to dinner without an unsolicited sales call. Since Indiana's law has been in effect, we rarely get a call, and then, only from a firm with whom we are already dealing.

While I have no problem with the FCC passing regulations in this area, I do not believe it is appropriate for the FCC to lessen or restrict the states' laws in this area.

Regards,

Kevin Haehl
